

Poly MBA students have variety of career backgrounds

By Laura Rosenblum
Staff Writer

Second of two parts

A Master of Business Administration degree works best when a person knows to what field they want the degree to apply.

Interviews with Cal Poly MBA students show many coming from a variety of career backgrounds, but with a common goal — combining technical knowledge with business expertise.

An informal survey taken at Stanford University found the average MBA student to be self-confident, aggressive and one who defines success largely in terms of salary income.

A more specific study shows the average Cal Poly MBA student is 28 and has worked four years after earning an undergraduate degree at a university other than Cal Poly. There is no typical undergraduate degree held — degrees range from engineering to illustration.

Grant Trexler, a Cal Poly undergraduate in agricultural management, received his MBA from Cal Poly in June. "I wanted to specialize in accounting and the MBA program gave me the opportunity to do that. It's better to get an advanced degree than two undergraduate degrees," Trexler said.

Trexler is a staff accountant for Price Waterhouse in Bakersfield. He credits the MBA degree for helping him get the job but warns that there can be some drawbacks. "It tends to hurt you a little bit in accounting because employers are expected to pay you more if you have an MBA."

Ed Fess, a first-year MBA student, is an emergency room doctor at Arroyo Grande Community Hospital. Fess claims that a "true entrepreneurial spirit" led him to explore the business side of medicine. "A lot of corporate structures have merged and they own hundreds of medical facilities," said Fess. "Medicine is becoming more of a business and I want to be on the edge of it."

Paul Cain, a second-year MBA student who earned his undergraduate degree in business administration management from Cal State Fullerton, worked for two years as a manufacturing engineer in Orange County for a company that makes restaurant computers. He hopes to land a job in project management in the manufacturing/engineering field.

Cain said it was better that he worked

David Moore looks at some of the books featured in the exhibit at the library gallery.

Unique books shown in library

By Sally Kinsell
Staff Writer

A book exhibit of some of the most unique books published in 1984 is being shown in the library gallery now through Oct. 21.

Rather than being judged by their content, these books of the 44th Western Books Exhibit were judged by their design, their type, the length of the lines, the paper selected, the weight of the page as visually experienced, the integration of text and graphic material, the use of decoration and the binding of the pages. The exhibit is sponsored by the Rounce and Coffin Club of Los Angeles.

"The exhibit includes books of all kinds," said Lynne Gamble, assistant to the library director, "but the design is what is important." She added that the type of books in the exhibit range from books which were printed by hand on century-old hand presses to books which were printed on presses that are very advanced and often computerized.

The people who do the printing of these books also range from those who print privately in their homes as a hobby, to large presses and publishers, said Gamble. A total of 49 winning entries are included in the exhibit this year.

This is the fourth year that this exhibit has been shown at Cal Poly, although it has been around for 44 years, said Gamble. "Each year it is different because it only includes the best books printed in the western half of the United States that year."

All of the books in the exhibit are for sale, said Gamble, "but some of the books are sold out before they are ever printed ... Once they're sold out their value increases dramatically." This is a result of the intricate nature of many of the books, she added.

The hand-printed books and those using special inks and papers are nearly impossible to reproduce in great quantity.

Gamble said designers often submit more than one entry. "Some of these designers are the top people in their field, so they are often the winners."

The Castle Press was by far the largest winner, with six winning entries. Other noted publishers include the Book Club of California, Richard J. Hoffman and Wind River Press. "Texas and California seem to lead the way in the West," Gamble said.

University presses from Texas, Nevada, California, Arizona and Hawaii were also included among the winners.

Covert assistance to Afghan rebels

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress has secretly approved about $250 million in further covert military aid to rebels fighting the Soviet-backed regime in Afghanistan, Senate sources said Wednesday.

One source, who with the others asked not to be identified by name, said the money will be spent to buy large quantities of ammunition, small arms, grenade launchers and anti-helicopter air defense weapons.

"It will enable them to replenish their stocks," he said. "It's a one-time replenishment. There is nothing being introduced that is brand new or especially esoteric. It's the kind of thing easily available anywhere in the world."

He said he could not confirm reports that the weapons may include the British-made Blowpipe portable missile system, used by Britain during the 1982 Falklands War with Argentina.

The issues of the long Soviet occupation of Afghanistan, and covert aid by several nations to the Afghan resistance, are virtually certain to be raised in the summit meeting in Geneva next month between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

There was some annoyance in Congress over the latest aid request because the Reagan administration asked for the funds late last month, immediately before the end of the 1985 fiscal year, the source said.

And he said there was some concern over the size of the request.

"We're reaching a position where a lot of us think there should be more debate on this program," the source said. "There is a lot of money involved."

Police are warning students against bringing valuables into the mens' locker room of the main gym because of a series of burglaries there, a campus police investigator said.

Officer Wayne Carmack said an unknown suspect has been taking wallets out of locked lockers and bags left on benches. "Do not leave wallets or valuables in the mens' locker room, not even in locked lockers," he said.

The burglaries began on Sept. 19 when a wallet was stolen from a locked locker. On Sept. 27 a padlock was broken and a wallet valued at $220 was removed. Two wallets were taken by the

On Oct. 4 a suspect went through two bags left on the benches, taking two wallets. Three wallets were stolen Monday from unlocked lockers between 7 and 8 p.m.

Carmack said the suspect is using a tool to pry open the metal strip of the sliding lock. "At least 10 lockers have been broken into (by this method.) We found more broken lockers than what's been reported."

Investigator Ray Berrett said the average value of the wallets have been around $40. One of the wallets has been recovered.

"Please report any suspicious persons hanging around the locker room to the Department of Public Safety," said Berrett.

Would you pay a nickel for the Mustang Daily?

By Kevin Cannon and Kevin H. Fox

Kevin Smith, electrical engineering, senior: I would if they expanded the coverage to include more campus and community news. I think the paper would be worth a nickel.

Todd Brown, agriculture engineering, junior: I would if they didn't come up with used news all the time.

Lynn Bachelor, child and family development, freshman: I would if there was something interesting in it that I would want to read that day.

Becky Hicks, history, freshman: Yeh, because I really like reading the personals.

Dawn McCants, political science/speech, senior: Yes, I think the paper is especially advantageous to students who don't have another media source as to what's going on around them. However, I do feel they should include more issues of the current administration's involvement in foreign policy.

Steve Fathi, agriculture engineering, sophomore: Sure I would. I read it all the time, it's great.

Some people just can't be fueled

Almost everyone knows how embarrassing it is when their car stalls at a stop light. That's much too easy for my car, it runs out of gas ... in the left hand turn lane so I hold up traffic ... at rush hour so as many of my friends as possible can drive by and see me pushing my car.

I guess I'm used to the embarrassment by now. Running out of gas becomes pretty routine once you've done it ten or twenty times. Someday the AAA will build a statue of me walking along the road carrying a gas can.

It's really not my fault. My gas gauge doesn't work. Well, it sorta works. When I make a right turn the needle points to "full," when I turn left it goes to "empty." When I'm driving on a windy road the needle swings back and forth like a windshield wiper. And it doesn't do windows either.

When I put gas in my tank, the needle always points to "full." Then I drive 10 miles and the needle points to "1/2." According to my calculations, that means I'm getting about two miles to a gallon. And they call VW Bugs economy cars. They're good for economy all right — Saudi Arabia's.

VW's have this little "R" on the gas gauge which stands for reserve. This would lead innocent VW owners to believe they have an extra little tank which switches on when the big tank is empty. It's a great comfort to know that when you run out of fuel you can switch to the reserve tank and drive to a gas station. There's only one slight catch: VW's don't have reserve tanks. Surprise! When the needle hits "R," you'd better pray it's all downhill to the nearest gas station.

Now driving my car is like playing Russian roulette; I never know which day of the week I'm going to run out of gas

My friends always tell me I should keep track of how many miles I drive so I'll know when to stop for gas. The problem with that idea is that my gas mileage varies depending on whether my carburetor has decided to take the week off or not. My owner's manual says incorrect tire pressure can adversely affect my mileage. This is true. In my many travels I've found you can't drive very far on a flat tire.

I tried the mileage method for awhile with some success, that is, until my odometer stopped working. Now driving my car is like playing Russian roulette — I never know which day of the week I'm going to run out of gas. I guess I could fill up once a week but it's kind of embarrassing to prepay the cashier $15 and have the tank only take $1.37 worth of gas.

I run out of gas in the darnedest places — like on the freeway in the fast lane or on South Broad by Industrial Way. Normally that wouldn't be a problem, except it was midnight and the nearest open station was at Marsh and Higuera. Once I got lucky and ran out of gas as I was pulling into a gas station. Talk about running out of gas in style! It wasn't until I'd filled up that I realized I didn't have my wallet with me. Another time I

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Lottery is really a tax that hurts poor

Editor — Recently, a new government institution was enacted to increase California's educational funding, and the money seemingly does not come from a tax increase. It's called the Lottery, and the money it could give to education is not as free as it may seem.

The education funds come from the one dollar price tag of each lottery ticket. Why should people spend one dollar on a game when their chances of winning anything is minute? Because people have hopes, and dreams of a magical solution to all their problems, something that would raise them above their peers, above their boring work, and above their family problems.

In our society, unfortunately, this wonder-drug is cold, hard cash.

Even most Cal Poly students, with their vast knowledge of economics, know that the people with the grandest dreams of riches are the poor and lower middleclass. So logically, these people would buy the most tickets. Hence, they would give the Lottery the most revenue, and bear the weight of the new "free" education funding.

So now it should be clear that this is not a game; it is a tax increase that, through human nature, must be borne by the poor. This, from a government that sells itself as being fair to the lower classes, is certainly unfair and un-American.

If you want lottery type tickets and the thrill of gambling, I suggest going to McDonalds. At least their game cards are free, and not sold by an institution that was founded on fair democratic laws.

In a Mustang Daily column of last week, the author took a pro-Lottery stance and compared the lottery to the ice cream section of a market because they are both tempting. This comparison is meaningless because it does not try to look at their differences. Ice cream is desirable to all; the Lottery, however, is more desirable to the lower classes. And so they are the ones paying for our educations.

In a world where it is proper to elevate the poor, where there are social programs, where there is free education and medical help, it is easy to let a bill or two get by you without realizing whom it will hurt. We forgot to look from someone else's point of view. It's easy, so don't forget someone — not even the poor.

American killed in hijacking

PORT SAID, Egypt (AP) — Palestinian hijackers of an Italian cruise ship with up to 511 people aboard surrendered Wednesday and the Italian prime minister said he was told one American passenger apparently was killed and thrown overboard.

Earlier, an Italian Foreign Ministry spokesman, citing a report from the ship's captain, and the Egyptian Foreign Ministry said all the passengers were safe after two days of terror on the Mediterranean Sea.

"He was apparently killed and thrown into the sea," Prime Minister Bettino Craxi told a news conference at his office in Palazzo Chigi in downtown Rome.

While Craxi did not say specifically that the hijackers killed the American, he left little doubt they were responsible.

Snowstorm plagues nine states

By The Associated Press

A storm hurled as much as two feet of snow across nine states with peak winds of 81 mph, closing schools and making highways treacherous Tuesday. But for North Dakota grain farmers it was just another bad day in a miserable month.

"It's the same rainy, wet story that has been told for the last six weeks," said Dan Dhuyvetter, Burke County agent in Bowbells, N.D. "There is a good 50 percent of the grain crop left unharvested."

"We have a lot of standing grain and the weight of the snow is starting to pull it down to the ground. Even if we do get some good weather from now on, I think we'll still be leaving quite a bit of crop in the fields."

Travelers advisories were posted in parts of Nevada, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado and Minnesota as well as in North Dakota, where winds up to 35 mph were blowing the snow into drifts Tuesday afternoon.

U.S. Senate passes balanced budget plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Wednesday passed a balanced budget plan and then rushed to alleviate the government's credit crunch with a short-term increase in the national debt, while the Treasury took steps to make sure government checks don't bounce for at least another week.

The lawmakers, by a vote of 75 to 24, approved the GOP-backed proposal to balance federal budgets by 1991. The action, delayed since last week by Democrat-led opposition, came after the Senate brushed aside a Democrat-sponsored alternative deficit-reduction program.

The votes set the stage for expected passage later Wednesday of a short-term increase in the government's credit limit.

Encouraged by the developments, the Treasury Department announced it would go ahead with an emergency auction to borrow $5 billion to keep the government afloat.

The auction will provide the government with just enough money to get by for the next few days. Congress was expected to complete action by day's end on the temporary increase in the debt limit — needed to sanction Monday's auction — but remained ensnarled in an accompanying measure to require a balanced federal budget in six years.

Democratic leaders, fighting a Republican-backed budget-balancing plan, resigned themselves to defeat in the Senate. But House Democrats hardened their opposition to the plan that backers want attached to the credit ceiling.

Days of negotiations between Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., and Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., climaxed when a marathon Senate session ended after 3 a.m.

Wednesday with a pact allowing passage in the afternoon of an amendment designed to eliminate the nation's deficit, currently about $200 billion a year, by fiscal 1991.

The measure was proposed by Sens. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, Warren Rudman, R-N.H., and Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., as an amendment to a bill raising the national debt to $2.078 trillion, enough to last through the fiscal year. Two test votes on Sunday indicated the amendment would pass.

Approval of the amendment, at the end of a six-day deadlock, cleared the way for action on a separate, short-term hike in the national debt. The interim hike, which must also be approved by the House, would allow Congress to leave for its Columbus Day recess this weekend without threat of the government defaulting on its obligations.

ANDY

ran out as I was pulling into my driveway. I thought I was really fortunate, until I realized I couldn't take another car to get a can of gas because my car was in the way.

Even if I remember to put gas in the tank, my car always seems to find a way to run out. Once I went three months without hitting "empty." I was really proud of myself. But my car couldn't handle the pressure of the streak so it broke a fuel line. I guess you have to be patient with a 15-year-old car; it's going through puberty.

The obvious solution to all this is to get my gas gauge fixed. Unfortunately, I'm one of those people who feels compelled to see how far he can drive on "empty" before he has to stop for gas.

So ladies, if you're ever out on a date with me and my car runs out of gas, don't think I'm trying to take advantage of you. It really did run out of gas. Of course, if we run out of gas and you want me to take advantage of you, well ... But don't forget, I have to have enough energy left to hike to the gas station.

Mental health focus of Senate committee

WASHINGTON (AP) — Her voice cracking with emotion, a congressman's wife emotionally recalled Wednesday the anguish she felt during her son's 15-year battle with mental illness.

"I used to ask myself what I had done wrong to cause him to act the way he did," Norma Lagomarsino, wife of Rep. Robert Lagomarsino, R-Calif., said as she occasionally dabbed her eyes with a handkerchief.

"It wasn't until later that I learned my son was suffering from schizophrenia, and that the illness was very, very real," she told the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee.

Mrs. Lagomarsino, 59, said she agreed to tell her story in hopes of educating more people about mental illness to eliminate the stigma attached to it.

Thanks to a combination of medication and psychotherapy, Mrs. Lagomarsino said her 34-year-old son has been able to get his life in order. She asked that he not be identified.

"He's a student at a university, enjoying his studies and college life. He has a girlfriend and tells me he has never been happier."

But she said the emotional and financial toll was high.

Only after her son was incarcerated at a state hospital for destroying property was he forced to confront his illness, she said.

ed to confront his illness, she said.

Besides talking publicly, Mrs. Lagomarsino and other congressional wives have joined together in an informal group to press lawmakers for more money for mental health research.

"Once the awareness goes up, stigma goes down, research goes up and services go up," said Nancy Domenici, the wife of Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.Mex.

Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., chairman of a Senate Appropriations health subcommittee, said fellow panel member Domenici worked hard for more money.

Domenici "put his shoulders behind that wheel and I'm delighted," Weicker said.

The House has approved $210 million for research at NIMH for fiscal year 1986, an increase of $17 million over last year. A Senate committee has boosted that figure to $216 million, and the full Senate will consider the issue shortly.

Shervert Frazier, director of the mental health institute, said state and local officials must turn their attention to the growing number of mentally ill people who live on their own, without the support of family or trained professionals.

Department chairman election signifies change

Physics department appointment is the first attempt to exercise option endorsed by President Baker last March

By Marc Meredyth
Staff Writer

With the election of the first department chairperson, Cal Poly has an alternative to its traditional head-of-department structure.

Leonard W. Wall, a 16-year member of the physics department faculty, was elected this quarter to serve a three-year term as chairman, rather than department head, of his department.

The appointment is the first since university President Warren Baker endorsed the idea of increased flexibility in department leadership last March. Lloyd Lamouria, Academic Senate chair, said the senate recommended to the president that the option of either department head or department chairperson be left to the discretion of each department.

There are two basic differences between the leadership positions, Wall said. First, the office of chairperson has a fixed term, while the appointment of department head is normally for an indefinite period.

Second, he said, a chairperson is elected by the faculty of the department in which he or she will serve, while a department head is appointed by the school dean with the approval of President Baker and the provost of-fice.

Wall said under the department head system, the faculty

'... you want to have the maximum faculty participation in departmental decision making' — Philip Bailey can make recommendations that the head may completely ignore during a decision-making process. In the physics department under the new system, the chair is simply a member of the tenured faculty who has additional administrative duties. The chair is just one more vote among a faculty of 32.

The responsibility of deciding whether to allow departments to go to the new system rests with the dean of each school. Dean of the School of Math and Science Philip Bailey said he takes the view that a university is there for the students and that every decision must be made in their best educational interests.

"The faculty are closest to the students," Bailey said, "therefore you want to have the maximum faculty participation in departmental decision making."

He said the School of Math and Science has always operated in a consultative manner, and it seemed the chair position was more natural for this way of doing things.

Bailey said the faculty as a group makes decisions democratically under the new system and this is beneficial because it gives those who are in the classroom more input on decision making.

Bailey stressed, however, that the choice is up to the individual department. He said the departments in his school have acted extremely responsible over the years and if they want a chairperson, they can have it and if they want the department head, that's fine too.

Once the dean's office and a department iron out an agreement on the roles and duties of the chairperson, the proposal is submitted to the provost's office for final approval.

Bonnie Brady, an administrative assistant to the office of the provost, said currently it looks as if most of the deans still prefer the department head approach, especially in the professional schools such as architecture, engineering and business.

Brady said the reason for this is that in those professions it is important for the departments to maintain contact with industry.

Central Coast valleys burst forth with a treasure of varietal wines

By Craig Andrews
Staff Writer

There's treasure on the Central California Coast — nestled in low-lying foothills and tucked away in fertile valleys.

Wine.

The Central Coast is dotted with nearly 30 vineyards and wineries between Paso Robles and Nipomo. Perhaps the greatest treasure is the experience of touring the facilities and tasting the wines.

This region produces a vast array of wine varietals — from the dark, red Cabernet Sauvignon of Paso Robles to the clear, golden Chardonnay of Edna Valley. One doesn't have to travel to northern California to tour the wine country.

But many county residents never visit wineries on the Central Coast. "A lot may be aware this is a wine area, but they have never ventured out," said Thomas G. Goss, general manager of Chamisal Vineyard, located in the Edna Valley. "Actually, there's a small percentage who are just not aware that this is such a good area to visit wineries. Many of them are students or new residents who are not aware of the extent of the wine industry here," Goss said.

There is, however, a push to get the word out by the wineries and chambers of commerce, said Jim Gibbons, vice president and general manager of Corbett Canyon Vineyards, located in Edna Valley. "Touring wineries is one of the things to do in California," Gibbons said. About 50 percent of the visitors at Corbett Canyon are tourists, he said.

one of the largest wineries in the Central Coast. It is a good facility for private and community functions, equipped with a large mission-style patio.

For those who desire a more intimate setting, there is a cozy picnic area at the tasting room at Chamisal Vineyard, located just across the valley from Corbett Canyon. "It's a fun place to take your guest," said Goss.

Both Goss and Gibbons said the 1985 harvest looks excellent in terms of the quality and amount of grapes on the Central Coast. Corbett Canyon has completed more than 80 percent of its pressing, while Chamisal has only four acres left to harvest.

It's the type of soil and climate that determine a good grape-growing region, said Vic Pesenti, owner and operator of Pesenti Winery in Templeton. "Every area has its own taste that's determined by the soil and climate. One of the major differences is the warmth here versus the Edna Valley. They are more likely to be growing more white grapes; you're not likely to find Zinfandel in Edna Valley," he said. "The wines in this area are just as good, if not better than those in Napa, and they're not as expensive," said Pesenti.

"What many people aren't aware of is that many wineries up north buy a lot of their grapes from down here," said Tomie Mulder, winemaker at El Paso de Robles Winery and Vineyards in Paso Robles. "When you come to these smaller wineries it's more handcrafted," she said.

Many Central Coast wineries have histories that date back in-in Paso Robles, was established in 1890, said owner Della Mertens.

The Central Coast is gaining a worldwide reputation for its grapes and wines, said Pesenti. "Today we've had them all the way from Canada and Germany," he said, looking down his guest register. "Yesterday we got hit by tour buses," he said, adding that an average summer weekend will yield up to 200 guests per day.

"A lot of the success of making good wine is from having a good staff," said Cary Gott, president and winemaker at Corbett Canyon Vineyards. He drew a foamy, brown liquid out of a 30,000 gallon tank and swished it around in a plastic measuring cup. "This is fermenting grape juice," he said, sniffing it. "This is going to be a nice wine. Know how I know? Years of experience." Gott has been in the wine business most of his life.

"You're always trying to build a reputation and a following. The tasting room is one of our ways of doing that," said Goss, as the boom of a propane canon broke the quiet rustling of the grape leaves. The canons are used to scare birds away from the grapes.

Gibbons said wine-drinking is something Americans have inherited from the Europeans. "We're basically novices. I'd like to see the U.S. becoming more Europeanized."

For those who desire to partake in this European tradition on the Central Coast, winery information is available at city chambers of commerce

Volleyballers to dig deep

Poly has nothing to lose

By Lisa A. Houk
Sports Editor

The possibility of changing history is usually unheard of, but the Cal Poly women's volleyball team hopes to wipe their past performances in the National Invitational Volleyball Tournament out of the pages of the old volleyball almanac and start a new chapter.

"We were never great in the past NIVT's, but then again this is a new season and we've got nothing to lose," said Mike Wilton, head coach of the Cal Poly women's volleyball team.

The Poly spikers will not need their history books to tell them what to do to win — a mixture of Coach Wilton, determination and volleyball instinct will take care of this three-day assignment. The NIVT requires intense homework, as the Mustangs have been practicing hard this week to face some of the best volleyball teams in the nation.

Pauley Pavilion will hopefully become Poly's Pavilion by late Saturday night after the championship match of the NIVT, as the Lady Mustangs will try to overstay their Thursday invitation to the UCLA campus.

The NIVT will host 20 teams, 13 of which are ranked in the national top-20. This tournament is considered the premier event outside of the National Collegiate Athletic Association Championships.

"This tournament lends itself to teams with lots of players," said Wilton. "I anticipated on taking 12 players, and now I've got eight — this will definitely test our mental and physical conditioning."

Under a new format this year, the NIVT will be spread out over three days instead of two, and every place between one and 20 will be determined by a three of five game match.

Wilton said, "The three days are better for us, but when we hit those three of five game matches, we'll know if it's what we really want."

The Lady Mustangs will be tested right away, as they travel to Bruinland today to face the University of Oregon at 6:30 p.m. The Oregon Ducks are led by Sue Harbour, a tremendous hitter, said Wilton.

Friday will be Poly's toughest challenge in terms of conditioning, as the Mustangs have to play back to back matches at 11:30 a.m. and 1 p.m., and then return at either 6 p.m. or 8 p.m. for the quarterfinals. All of Friday's matches are best two-of-three games, except for the 8 p.m. quarterfinal bracket for the top eight teams, which is best three of five games.

Poly's first match on Friday is against the hungry Aztecs of San Diego State, who gave the Mustangs a five-game run for the money match last week, in which

Referees take the blame

The other night while at the UC Davis-Cal Poly football game, I became wrapped up in the atmosphere which surrounds the game of football. The hot dogs, the bands, the cheerleaders and the familiar cries of 'kill the ref' create an aura no other sport possesses.

First, the poor referee always gets the blame, when in fact there is not only a referee, but an umpire, head linesman, line judge, field judge, back judge and believe it or not — a paid observer. Yet, I suppose it might be too much to ask for someone to say, 'kill the head linesman,' for his part in a bad call is rarely recognized.

It also might be too much to ask to consider their side of the story, as did ABC last Sunday night. ABC carried a special edition of Monday night football on Sunday Night (figure that one out), featuring Dallas at New York. The gang, Joe, O.J. and the Giff, however unlikely, made an astute observation with the help of the replay.

Sports Analysis

By Tim Robinson

They pointed out how all of us become officiating experts on the super-slow, near-dead replays. In fact, the replay is often so slow it looks like the game of football doesn't really hurt — they just kind of float to the turf on tackles. On the normal speed replay, which ABC so cleverly used, Frank Gifford said, "This is what it looks like to an official, quite another story."

It is quite another story. It also may be a matter of perspective. The official is often within a few feet of the play, however, See REFEREES, Page 10

The men in the stripes, who only receive attention for the bad calls, here signify a good call for the Mustang fans as Poly scores a touchdown in the Davis game. The referees did their job, but the Aggies won 34-21.

Giants can't find a field

OAKLAND (AP) — The San Francisco Giants struck out wednesday in their bid to share the Oakland Coliseum with the A's as the Coliseum's board of directors rejected the proposed move.

The rejection left Giants' owner Bob Lurie with a decision about whether to stay at Candlestick Park, attempt to move to another city or sell the club. He has said the club will no longer play in Candlestick Park under his ownership.

The Coliseum's board announced at a news conference that they won't agree to the Giants' proposal to move into the A's ballpark for several years until a downtown stadium is built in San Francisco.

Coliseum president George Vukasin said the board's decision was unanimous and called it "a simple business decision" that was final.

"It's regrettable that the board has taken its action without having given the Giants an opportunity to present their proposed solutions to some of the problems the board feels would be caused by the Giants playing at the coliseum," said Giants spokesman Duffy Jennings.

Giants owner Bob Lurie was in Arizona for the club's annual organizational meetings and was unavailable for immediate contact.

REFEREES

the fan is in a much better position to make the call — sometimes at a distance of over 50 to a 100 yards. These are the same people who would probably hate people looking over their shoulder while they work. Imagine a stadium of people looking over your shoulder while you work.

Mistakes, yes they've made a few, but they also do it their way — and their way is usually hundreds of correct calls a night. It's not the 129th correct call that gets the press, but the bad one that does. I would imagine officials might call it, the bad news syndrome.

The fan does have a legitimate gripe, though, as it is hard to lose a game on a bad call. Yet how many times has that same fan smiled and with a wink said, 'too bad, the ref missed that one.' I know I have.

If you want to know the criteria of a good officiating crew, consider how often you remember them, with exception of penalties. Then, consider the chaos that occurs on those Sunday afternoon pick-up games, where without officials the games resemble 'a kill the guy with the ball' affair. Take away those officials and that's what you would have.

There are also some myths to dispell. First, the officials are not some guys who happen to be passing by the stadium an hour before the game, who happen to fit into the uniforms, and who had nothing better to do on Saturday night. Second, there is also a myth that one week these men in stripes officiate Pop Warner games and then move on to the big time college and pro football games — wrong.

Even the high school level of officiating will take years of working games to come by, and even more to reach a level, such as upper division college games. The officials will be the first to admit their wrong, especially if the evidence shows up on the 11 p.m. sports show. Fortunately, these officials enjoy a certain amount of anonymity, for example, how many can you name? Therefore, the headlines never read 'official blows call,' and they don't have to live under a rock.

So the next time one of the officials blows a call, even if it costs your team the game, consider his point of view, and then yell, 'kill the ref.'

SPIKERS

Poly came out ahead 15-12, 15-5, 13-15, 11-15, 15-6. The 1 p.m. match is against a Lamar team out of Beaumont, Texas.

"We can't let up on any team in this tournament, and last Friday we let San Diego get too close," said Wilton. "This Friday we'll need to take every possible advantage and more to come out on top."

A couple of interesting notes for Mustang fans: San Diego State recently dropped a four-game match to the University of California, Santa Barbara, and UCLA lost to Stanford University as two of the Bruin starters were not present at the Cardinal match.

'We can't let up on any team ...'

— Coach Wilton

Today is a new day, however, and Pauley Pavilion will be hopping with spikers and blockers for the next two days as the arena will be divided into three main courts for constant volleyball action leading to the finals. Saturday, all semifinal, final and championship matches will be the best three of five games.

Some of the top 1985 NIVT participants are: UCLA, San Diego State, Brigham Young University, University of Southern California, Fresno State, University of the Pacific and University of Hawaii. The teams in the tournament represent a total of nine states and Canada, plus of the 20 teams, 15 went to the NCAA Tournament last year. UOP has taken home the NIVT title the past three years.

Wilton said, "UOP has a number of good athletes to fill their bench, so they adapt well to this type of tournament — but so can we."

MBA DEGREE

several years instead of going directly into the MBA program like he originally had planned to do. "I'm a lot more interested in the material. It's active learning, not passive learning."

Cain chose the Cal Poly program because it's more "career-specific" than other programs such as San Francisco State or University of Santa Clara. Cain said he will undoubtedly have a better salary than a person entering the job market with an undergraduate degree. "Having some experience, returning for an MBA and then re-entering the job market will all give me an added advantage," he said.

According to Walters, the MBA program is not emphasizing recruitment among undergraduates at Cal Poly. The program staff prefers that students be a mix of people with a variety of educational and work experiences.

Joe Trebbien is one of the few students who has entered directly from undergraduate status at Cal Poly into the MBA program. After obtaining an economics degree in June of this year, he led an unsuccessful search for a job in management and ended up back at Cal Poly to earn his master's degree in business administration.

"In my last year of school I decided to go into management rather than forecasting and statistical work," said Trebbien. What he found was that most management training programs prefer people with MBAs. Trebbien said Dominic Perello, economics professor at Cal Poly, had advised him not to enroll in the MBA program at Cal Poly.

"If you've gone through the undergraduate program you ought to go look at a competitive program and a new faculty," Perello said. He also advises students to get job experience before earning an MBA. He said people who come back to earn their degree after working for several years have a better feel for what they want to accomplish.

"To me an MBA says I'm an engineer. I've worked five years in the field and now I'm prepared to manage people, handle a budget and do decision-making," said Perello. He views an MBA as a chance for someone who is in a narrow and technical field to branch out to the business aspect of their field. "A technically-skilled individual is given the opportunity to move up the management level," Perello said.

Walters agrees that the MBA program is especially helpful to students with an undergraduate degree in a technical field such as architecture, engineering and agriculture.

"Almost every technical field needs to know the business background of their business," said Walters. "Management skills and technical skills really go together. They're a super combination."

Alcohol poll to be conducted today

A student opinion poll on alcohol permits in San Luis Obispo city parks will be conducted in the University Union Plaza today from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

The Center for Practical Politics, the sponsor of the poll, is one of over 20 community agencies that is participating in the Community Fair held in the U.U. Plaza.

The alcohol in the parks opinion poll is a result of the efforts of students working with the Center for Practical Politics. The Center is a research organization which employs students to do research or conduct surveys on a variety of issues which concern the campus and the community.
